A Pretiy Wedding.

A Pretty Wedding.

A very pretty function of the past week was the ecremony attendant upon the wedding of Miss Lizzie Shaw to Mr. A. B. McConnell which was performed by Father McShane at St.Theresa's church The bride was attired in a handsome lavender silk costume with point lace, hat and diamonds, and carried a beautiful boquet of roses. She was accompanied to the altar by her maid of honor, Miss Hayden, of Omaha, who wore a becoming gown of heliotrope silk. Mr. Harry Hussey, of Omaha, was the groom's best man. After the ceremony the bridal party, with about thirty invited guests, departed to the home of Mrs. H. M. Rice which had been handsomely decorated for the occasion. The parlors were banked with tropical plants and roses. After congratulations had been heartily given the young couple by all present, the company partook of an elegant wedding supper in the dining down over the centre of the table, which was abundantly trimmed with floral decorations. The scene presented was very any most merrily to all present. When the Bloom of Youth Is Lost-Olive Harper's Advice to Matrons-Their Daughters Are Also Told How to Dress Becomingly.

[Special Correspondence.] New YORK, June 29.—It is a difficult and heartbreaking period for a woman. that lying between youth and old age, and few women have the courage to face it. It means that all the little sweet attentions given the young women are out of place if offered, and they are offered more and more rarely, for there is a time when youth has flown and old age has not yet come-that the woman has not the pleasures of youth nor the privileges and honors of many years. It is hard for the woman to give up one after an-

GOWNS FOR MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS. other the dainty little adornments only suitable for youth, but, oh, so pretty! Henceforth she must dress in heavier and statelier goods. She cannot wear the ribbons, the hats, the styles, of her younger sisters. Her hair must not be dressed so becomingly, and over all her attire must be that soberness belitting the "middle aged woman."

If it were only all youth and old age, without that dreaded middle age, when a woman is made to feel that she is "nothing to nobody," many homes would be happier, for the middle aged woman is not happy. Indeed I think the pitiful struggle of a woman to remain youngthe whole world slights and ignores heris the most pathetic sight in the world. Her husband has not kept pace with her. She has suddenly passed beyond beauty and youth, and if she resents his turning to fresher faces she has an added cross to bear. Her husband is called a young man still, and he is so, even though he has passed into his forties, but the woman-well, she must try to bear it and study herself a little so as to avoid too youthful dress on one side or falling into a careless habit on the other.

Now is the time for her to wear the 1118-1122 N ST. thick rick fabrics that are so handsome that the eye is drawn to them rather than to the fading face. Lace is of the greatest value, and wherever lace, black or white, can possibly be added to a gown it should be. Crepe lisse rufiles are also exc. 'lent for a softening effect. Full lace ruttles around the neck, be it on gown, negligee or cloak, are desirable. Let the bonnet be of lace, with broken lines around the edges, and let the whole apparel be neat without that exact precision that strictly belongs to old age.

The complexion suffers with the rest. and it grows sallow, and this requires great care in the selection of colors. Grays, greens, some browns, all purples and most blues should be let severely alone. Choose instead the snuff browns, tans, pinks, garnets and deep, rich tints | TELEPHONE 457. in blue. Dark green can be worn by putting lace, lots of lace, between the gown and the neck.

One design for a middle aged lady is a superb black grenadine with velvet stripes, and, by the way, velvet is the most becoming material the woman who is losing her youth can wear. This model has a plain skirt and a plain, gathered waist, with a wrinkled velver belt. The sleeves are modified balloon puffs, and there is a simulated Eton jacket of embroidered velvet. Around the neck is a ruff of lace. A small black lace and jet bonnet completes the toilet, which is very elegant, but, alas! not what the lady would fain wear.

ELEGANT SUMMER ATTIRE FOR MATRONS. Her daughter in her little frock of hairline zephyr, lilac and white, with the low garden hat of soft straw covered with buttercups, looks a picture of loveliness, and her whole outfit does not cost a twentieth part of that of her mother. Such is life!

There are other matrons not quite so old, and for them almost anything is permitted, yet those who have a reputation for correct dressing keep a little distance from the styles set apart for young girls. One very refined dress was of stone gray cashmere sublime with five rows of satin ribbon of the exact shade sewed on flat. The corsage is like a redingote, but turns down at the top in a bertha cape, and the top is filled in with cream crepe de chine, and there is a fall of lace.
